HUM OF THE TROLLEY.

ft Has Taken Possession of the At mosphere of the Country. Harper's Monthly.

everywhere. It has taken possession of the atmosphere in the country. In the great strident noises contend with it, it is less felt than in villages and on country roads. There is scarcely any escape now from its ways. At the dead hour of the night the render in a secluded country house hears it call to him, dragging him out of his world of poetry, out of his mediaeval romance, out of his classic studies, dissipating his dream of security and repose, insisting that he should pay attention to the passing by of the nineteenth century-nay, more, to

It bids him arise and gird his lions and go somewhere, anywhere, indeed, everywhere, and for nothing comparatively-for five cents. The world is in motion, the American world is all in motion-never more to rest, to sit still, to reflect, but to go. The trolley calls and we must go.

The whole air is electric, and we can only have peace by putting ourselves in the current and moving on with the whitring, whizzing world. Who rides so late through the night and wind? Is it that new being,

Oh my beloved child! It is the modern Erikonig, and his victims he holds them fast and keeps them warm, for his car is heated by electricity. Willy-nilly, we must go with him. He turns on the lightning with a crank, and he speeds a way like not much matter. Anywhere, so we keep in motion. The earl king smiles, the earl king grins, the earl king frowns. He has his hand on the lever of the universe.

The hum that he makes is not exactly the music of the spheres, though it is part rest. Probably we ought not to rest. The machine that runs wears longer than the machine that runs. That, at least, is our American theory. I fancy that the very patriotic American colonial dame, Mistress Abigail Adams, would have enjoyed the bustle of this present time.

A hundred years ago, when detained by calm on the Atlantic, her first voyage on the bateful sea, she wrote: desirable in any situation of life. Every object is most beautiful in motion; a shi under sail, trees gently agitated with the wind, and a fine woman dancing are three instances in point. Man was made for action, and for bustle, too, I believe. I am quite out of conceit with calms." Let the motorman, the vicegerent of lightning, turn on his crank.

ceedingly probable that they who wear it at least if they be women, have a voice in deciding its fashion.

With the exception of the invalids, all are required to keep their clothes in good re-pair and to pay a certain amount of atten-tion to their personal appearance. These are points which, especially in Vienna, are strongly insisted upon, for the city does not choose to have its old pensioners going about dirty or in rags. The hall porter has strict orders to allow no one to go out until he has "tidled up," and this regula-tion is warmly approved by the majority of the inmates themselves.

To an outsider it certainly seems superluous, for most of the old people are the very picture of neatness. They all appear to have a good supply of clothes.

One of the inmates of the Prague home insisted on showing me his wardrobe. In addition to the rough gray suit he was wearing, he had a pair of dark trousers and waistcoat, all in thoroughly good con-dition. He had, too, under his care a silk gown, which he displayed with infinite pride. It was his wife's wedding dress, he told me. His wife, who lives in another wing of the building, had, it seems, handed it over to him for greater safety. "She always wears it. though, of course, when we pay visits," he remarked incidentally.

One of the laundry regulations of the homes sounds in English cars a sorry jest, yet perhaps, after all, it has its raison detre. The inmatea are warned that it is only their bed linen and clothes that are washed free of charge—not their putwasche; that is, lace frills and furfictowal
